

it as a kind of offence.

But as they became more impatient, I decided to give a helping hand. They accepted my help and said they had lost their way in the town and didn't know how to use the navigation system on the phone. I happened to have learned it before in class so I helped them operate the apps on their phones.

Through lots of troubles, I found the right route.

Finally, they found their way home and thanked me for my help. I was very glad, and I was also proud of myself to overcome my shyness.
